Fact Sheet: ASBESTOS & THE HEALTH RISKS

This Fact Sheet gives a brief overview of asbestos and the potentially significant risks that relate to asbestos exposure.

What is Asbestos?

Asbestos is a naturally-occurring mineral and is found in rock, sediment or soil in a very few areas within South Australia. It was mined in these areas until its ban in 1983. Asbestos can also be naturally found in the environment and is referred to as naturally occurring asbestos (NOA). Most NOA is found in Western Australia.

Asbestos has strong fibres that are heat resistant and have good insulating properties which has led to its historical use mainly in cement water pipes and cement sheeting in buildings. It is also found in brake pads and pipe lagging and in flooring materials.

Asbestos is categorised into two types based on the level of risk to health:

Non-friable asbestos

A product that contains asbestos fibres that have been mixed with other materials, such as cement. Non-friable asbestos in good condition poses a negligible risk to health as it is unlikely to produce airborne fibres.

Friable asbestos

A material that contains asbestos that can be easily crumbled or reduced to powder, such as insulation by hand pressure.

Friable asbestos is considered to pose the greater health risk because loose fibres from it are more likely to become airborne when disturbed.

Exposure to asbestos may occur during work activities particularly if they are in contact with or close to asbestos-containing materials that:

- have been damaged such as by fire, drilling, sanding, cutting or smashing
- are involved in building or maintenance work
- are being demolished or removed
- are being weathered

As a general rule if a house was built:

- before the mid-1980s it is highly likely that it has asbestos-containing products
- between the mid-1980s and 1990 it is likely that it has asbestos containing products
- after 1990 it is unlikely that it has asbestos-containing products*

* Some houses built in the 1990s and early 2000s may have still used asbestos cement materials until the total ban on any activity involving asbestos products became effective from December 2003 Source Department of Health

With this information in mind identify the build date of the house or building you are visiting.

Asbestos and cancer

Asbestos is extremely fibrous, and the tiny fibres are easily breathed in where they can become trapped in the lungs. Being exposed to asbestos increases the risk of developing cancers of the lung, ovary and larynx as well as mesothelioma (cancer of the lining of the lung). These cancers often develop decades after exposure to asbestos. Your cancer risk from asbestos varies, depending upon the:

- length of time you are exposed to airborne asbestos fibres
- amount of asbestos fibres in the air breathed
- frequency of exposure to asbestos fibres
- time since exposure occurred
- age at which exposure occurred
- type and size of asbestos fibres.

Those most likely to have been exposed to asbestos in the workplace include transport workers (particularly waterside workers), asbestos miners and millers, asbestos cement manufacturing workers, builders, plumbers, insulators, electricians and mechanics.

Today, all states and territories in Australia have work health and safety laws that explain duty of care for employers and workers' responsibilities to reduce the risk of asbestos exposure.

What should I do if I have found suspected asbestos material or suspect I have been exposed to asbestos?

- ensure you know the build date of the building you are in to verify if asbestos is present
- remove yourself from the material and the building, advise others to do the same
- immediately notify your Manager once clear of the material
- maintenance processes are to be commenced in regard to isolating and testing the material
- consider contacting the Work Health & Safety (WHS) Advisor 0427 931 838
- record the incident on the Hazard / Incident Reporting System (MySAFETY).
